Dear George,

I am leaving tomorrow to return to Moscow. Since the President has replied to your telegram, which I appreciated receiving, there is perhaps no need for me to reply separately, but I thought I might give you a few of my own thoughts.

In general, I agree with your point that Khrushchev's moves over Berlin and Germany have been mainly defensive, arising out of the failure of the East German regime. But I attach importance, as does Chip, to his public statement to the Congress setting off the deadline. This is probably related not only to the evidences of our willingness to negotiate but also to the "correlation of forces." I don't think they have an answer to the Polaris and, moreover, you will doubtless have seen in the public press (Joe Klop, Drew Pearson, and others) that there has been a reappraisal here of Soviet ICBM capabilities very much downward.

I think the Soviet military has been able to successfully exert pressure on Khrushchev on military matters such as atomic testing. I also think that under the way the system now operates Khrushchev himself allows, if not encourages, discussion at the top over policy. But he is still capable of pushing his own views through whenever he wants to. The Chinese stance is, however, something he must always worry about.
